Wind energy has an important role in providing electricity to the world while reducing pollution and greenhouse gases. In 2016 it made up 3.7% of electricity production around the world, and over 30% in some countries. Many experts (1) predict that it will provide up to 20% of the world's electricity by 2030. It is seen as a clean, safe, new and exciting technology that will help power the world into the twenty-first century.

(2), wind energy is far from new. In fact, in one form or another, it is one of the (3) energy forms. Up until the 1790s and the first steam boats, the world's lakes and oceans were crossed by boats and ships of all sizes, powered only by the wind captured in their sails. The first sails were used around 7,000 years ago on the River Nile in Egypt. Empires rose to great heights thanks to their people's skill at using wind power. One of the first were the Phoenicians who combined wind power and muscle power (from slaves who rowed the ships) to join together cities and colonies all around the Mediterranean Sea. On the other side of the world, and about two thousand years later, wind was used to take groups of people across the vast Pacific Ocean to small islands like Hawaii. One of the late empires to depend on the wind was the British Empire, that "ruled the waves" with its huge navy of sailing ships.

Wind was also used in farming and industry. Simple windmills were used in China to pump water from about 200 BC. A thousand years ago in the Middle East, windmills were widely used in food production, such as turning grain into flour. This technology spread from there into Europe. In Holland, a huge network of windmills was used to drain lakes and marshes, protecting farms and cities.

Wind power was first used to generate electricity in 1887 in Scotland and again later that year in a separate experiment in America. Research and development in wind technology continued throughout the twentieth century, but it was not until the 1970s (4) the price of oil shot up that governments started to see it as a possible source of electricity. Now, as the world becomes more (5) aware of climate change and the dangers of burning fossil fuels, wind power is widely seen as a necessary renewable energy source in many countries.

China has the most wind turbines in the world with about 35% of the world's share in 2016, and is building more new wind turbines than all other countries combined. Denmark gets around 40% of its electricity from wind power. Japan still has a long way to go — the current plan is to produce 1.7% of electricity from wind by 2030.

問1 文中の(2)(3)(4)に入る語句として最も適切なものを下の①~④の中から一つ選び、 その番号で答えなさい。

- · · · ·	2 - L1 / 0 - 4 -	0
(2)	1 And	② Then	③ However	<li>④ Therefore</li>
(3)	1 old	<li>② oldest</li>	③ new	(4) newer
(4)	$(\widehat{1})$ what	(2) how	3 why	(4) when

問2 下線部(1) predict, と(5) aware, とほぼ同等の意味となる語句として最も適切なものを下の ①~④の中から一つ選び、その番号で答えなさい。

(1) predict

- read talk about
- ③ look into the future
- $(\widehat{4}) $  think a lot about something

(5) aware
 ① smell
 ② try out different things

- keep in touch
- ④ learn about
- 問3 本文の内容に合うように、次の a ~ e の質問として最も適切なものを下の①~④の中から 一つ選び、その番号で答えなさい。
  - a. According to the passage, how much electricity was made by wind power in 2016?
    - ① about 30%
    - about 20%
       almost 4%
    - almost 4%
       almost 2%
  - b. According to the passage, when was wind power first used?
    - 1 from the 1790s
    - (2) from about 5,000 B.C.
    - in Egypt
       from 200 B.C.
  - c. According to the passage, why did governments see wind power as a possible source of electricity
    - in the 1970s? ① Because of global warming
    - Decause of global war
       Decause it was cheap.
    - Because it was cheap.
       Because the price of oil suddenly increased.
    - ④ It is not clear.

d. According to the passage,

- Wind power was first used to make electricity in the Nineteenth Century.
   The Chinese were the first to use wind power to make electricity.
   People started using wind power to make electricity in the 1970s.
   Knowledge of wind power spread from Europe to the Middle East.
- According to the passage, which of these statements is incorrect?
   ① A fifth of the world's electricity might be produced by wind by 2030.
   ② Europe learnt about windmills from China.
- ③ Denmark gets about two fifths of its electricity from wind power.④ Japan does not use a lot of wind power to make electricity.
- (4) Japan does not use a lot of wind power to make electricity.
